DEDICATION

*To Charley and Donna Ault for all their love and support.
Also, thank you, Annie, for your delightful book.*

STORY OF THE PLAY

He's back! And this time he's on-line! Scrooge on the net. Set amid modern technology, this new adaptation of Dickens' classic tale introduces us to Monica Banks (ever so "affectionately" called Money Banks by her overworked staff) who has no time for holidays. Scrooge first appears on the screen of Monica's computer for the start of her virtual adventure across the World Wide Web to find the true meaning of Christmas.

In a blithe, warm-hearted trip with the outrageously costumed Scrooge, Monica's reviews her whole life, from a lonely childhood, to her current over-worked career, to her bleak future--unless she changes now! All the other well-known characters are present too: the poor child, the anxious parent, and the unappreciated employee.

In a unique blend of tradition and technology, both endearing and enduring, we are reminded that Christmas is a season of second chances.

SETTING

There is a split set. SR is an office that contains a chair and desk (computer and telephone on the desk), a sofa, and a coat rack. There is an entrance door SR. SL there is a large, putty-colored frame, at least 8 feet high. The frame extends diagonally from DSL to USC.

ACT I
Scene 1

(AT RISE: The near future, 5:15 a.m., Christmas Eve, Seattle, Washington. The LIGHTS on Monica's office are on. The LIGHTS on the frame are off.)

NOAH: (Offstage.) Come along, Tina.

(NOAH TIMMONS enters the office helping TINA TIMMONS. Tina uses crutches to help her walk.)

TINA: I'm sorry I interrupted you, Grandpa, but I really, really had to go.

NOAH: That's all right, baby. I'll just finish up in the hallway here and we'll go home.

TINA: OK. (SHE hobbles over to the desk and starts to crawl under it, laying her crutches on the floor.)

NOAH: Is that comfortable enough under there?

TINA: Yeah. The blanket and pillow are soft and warm.

NOAH: All right, then. I'll get back to work. You rest awhile. And remember, don't touch anything.

TINA: (From under the desk.) Thanks, Grandpa.

(NOAH exits. After a moment, TINA gets out from under the desk, sits in the chair, and turns on the computer. LIGHTS on the frame come on. Standing in the frame is DOUG BANKS. This is what Tina sees on the computer screen. Doug appears to be about 40, and is dressed casually, but neatly.)

TINA: OK, Doug. I'm back.

DOUG: Good. You know, Tina, I think you're pretty lucky to be programming computers at eight. I wasn't programming when I was eight because the stuff wasn't available then. But I would be, if I were eight today.

TINA: What do we do next, Doug?

DOUG: We need a main character, Tina. But I never read story books when I was a kid, I read instruction books. Who do you think we should get to help somebody become a better person?

TINA: Umm ... Mama likes Doctor Ruth.

DOUG: No, it's not that kind of change.

TINA: Oprah?

DOUG: It should be somebody who's not still ... around.

TINA: I know. Scrooge.

DOUG: No. No ducks!

TINA: Not Scrooge McDuck! I mean the Scrooge from the Christmas story. You know, the one who went from saying "Bah! Humbug!" on Christmas Eve to "Merry Christmas" the next morning.

DOUG: You're a smart kid, Tina. Scrooge it is. Yeah. We'll use old Scrooge.

TINA: Doug, what exactly is this program we're making?

DOUG: It's an override, Tina.

TINA: What does that mean?

DOUG: It means it's a program that won't let any other programs run until it's finished.

TINA: Why?

DOUG: Because it's the most important program that will ever run on any of the computers in this company.

TINA: Are you sure it's OK for us to be doing this?

DOUG: What else would you be doing? You said your mother works nights, too, so you can't stay home alone. That's why you come here with your grandfather.

TINA: Grandpa told me not to touch anything while he's working.

DOUG: Look, it's important to learn how to use computers, right?

TINA: I suppose.

DOUG: Remember, I used to own this place. All the buildings and computers. I was the boss. But you might say I'm on vacation now. Permanently.

TINA: I guess that's all right, then.

DOUG: Believe me, it's OK. But keep it our secret for now. What we're doing will help somebody a lot, if we do it right.
