STORY OF THE PLAY

Seattle, Washington, the late 1880s. There are 10 men for every woman in the territory, excellent odds for Shamus Donovan, an Irish fisherman with five daughters to marry off. Several town council members immediately fall for the younger daughters, but unfortunately, a family tradition says the eldest must marry first. But the oldest daughter is Katherine, a wild cat! In a woman-starved town like Seattle there has to be someone desperate enough to take on Katherine!

Using William Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew as a guide, the men give Danny O'Brien, a federal marshal, advice on how to tame the wild Katherine. Add to the mix two feuding Indian tribes, three dim-witted lumberjacks, and a botched kidnap scheme, and you have all the elements for one of the most energetic romances the West has ever seen.

PROPS

Banner which reads, "Seattle Fisherman's Inn"; pipe for Shamus; luggage; matchsticks for Clive; hotel register and keys for Abby; books, knitting needles, yarn for Specter girls; coats and gloves; pajamas for Darien; robe and towel for Agatha; journal and pen for Katie; animal skin, burlap bag with beef jerky, three 3' to 4' lengths of rope, and stage knife for loggers' cabin; starter gun and holster for Danny; small black book for Asa.

COSTUMES

All clothing is of the late 1800s. Girls should wear ankle-length dresses and skirts. Men's clothing often consisted of three-piece suits. Lumberjacks should wear jeans and flannel shirts. Danny should look more traditionally western with jeans, leather vest, gun and holster. Both male and female Indians can wear short-sleeved tunics made of muslin or any beige material. The women's tunics should be longer and the men can wear brown or black jeans under theirs. Fringe at the hem of the body and sleeves gives the costume more of an "Indian look." Add some beads and headbands (with feathers for the men) and moccasins or canvas shoes to complete the looks.

SFX: Gunshot and avalanche sounds needed in Act II, Scene 3.
(The sounds are included on the performance CD.)

SETTING

The main set, the parlor of the Seattle Fisherman's Inn, consists of three exits: USR leads upstairs; USL leads outside; and DSR, leads to the kitchen and back exit. There is a counter at SR, a small sofa (or better yet, a wooden bench for ease of movement) at CSR, and a small round table with two chairs at SL, fireplace UCS (optional). Across the UPS wall hangs a banner with "Seattle Fisherman's Inn" painted crudely on it. The flats and set may be decorated in any manner you choose, but should reflect the "woodiness" of Seattle and the era (pre-electric).

A second location, the lumberjacks' cabin, is created by removing the sofa, table and chairs and bringing to CS portable flats painted to represent a log cabin. Four 4 x 8 cardboard panels connected with reinforced packing tape and painted work well for this because they are light weight and can be folded at the tape joints for ease of movement and storage.
