STORY OF THE PLAY

Ivan's greatest ambition has always been to learn the Language of the Birds. When he shows off his pet nightingale for show and tell at school, he is teased until he runs away. Seeking shelter in the forest, Ivan protects baby birds from a storm. In gratitude, the mama bird grants Ivan's wish and teaches him to speak Bird. When his parents Mama Lou and Papa Joe find out that Ivan not only can speak Bird, but is now speaking in a heavy Russian accent, Ivan promptly finds himself sold off as a cabin boy on a ship. A band of tough girl pirates soon takes over, and they sail the ship off to pillage Daisyland, a peace-loving, hacky-sack-playing port town. Happily, Ivan's ability to speak to birds saves the day! As Mama Lou sums it up, "If the world thinks yer nuttier than a pecan pie and you ain't making no more sense than a screen door on a submarine, don't let it get ya down. Go fer yer dreams and believe in yerself, like my Ivan done, and ya might just come out all right." Based on a Russian fairytale entitled The Language of the Birds. About 1 hour.

AUTHOR NOTES

The “tweets” and “squawks” spoken by the birds and Ivan should be the word “tweet” and the word “squawk,” rather than trying to actually mimic the sounds of birds (because, well, it’s funnier that way). Ivan and Sasha speak in thick Russian dialects. Be creative with these over-the-top characters and have fun!

SCENE 1 – School

(AT RISE: Empty stage. MAMA LOU enters.)

MAMA LOU: Well, howdy there! I am Fairlight Henrietta Louchetta Ivy Sue-Ellen Washington. But you can call me Mamma Lou. I'm here to tell you a little story 'bout my one and only dear son, Ivan. Now I reckon we knew from the time Ivan was knee-high to a grasshopper that he was something, well, special. While other lil' boys were playin' with trucks or bugs or toy soldiers, Ivan was running around—

(YOUNG IVAN enters and crosses the stage flapping and tweeting like a bird. He exits.)

MAMA LOU: (Cont'd.) Doing that. And when the local youngsters hollered for him to come outside, ride bicycles, or play whirligigs—

(CHILDREN enter and cross the stage calling to IVAN.)

CHILDREN: (Calling.) Come 'long, Ivan! Come out to play! We're goin' to the ball field! We're gonna ride down the holler! Come on! (Etc.)

(CHILDREN exit. YOUNG IVAN enters and crosses the stage flapping and tweeting like a bird. He exits.)

MAMA LOU: Ivan was still doing that. He was so obsessed with them dagum birds that one day his Papa Joe, thinking it might shut the boy up a bit, gave in and surprised him.

PAPA JOE: Ivan boy, despite the fact that yer plain weird, you've generally been a right good son.

PAPA JOE: (Cont'd.) So I been a thinkin' that maybe it's time you had a pet, ya know, "man's best friend" and all... So said, here she is. A nightingale. I got her half price from the feller at the hardware store. Her name is Florence.

(FLORENCE and YOUNG IVAN embrace and begin to flap and tweet together. They exit. PAPA JOE shakes his head.)

PAPA JOE: (Cont'd.) The cheese done slid off that boy's cracker. (Exits.)

MAMA LOU: Instead of breaking Ivan out of his eggshell, so to speak, Ivan just holed himself up with Florence the Nightingale, trying his darndest to learn her language. When he couldn't on the life of him figure out a way to understand her bird-talk, he fell into a fit, cryin' and whinin' and becoming downright intolerable. The boy—

(SUGAR SUE peeks her head out.)

SUGAR SUE: Mamma Lou, can ya get 'long with the story? My hair's losin' its fluff.

MAMA LOU: You look fine, Sugar Sue. Right. So. Let's move forward a few years. Ivan! Miss Martin! All you young'uns get on out here.

MAMA LOU: (Cont'd.) We're starting with Ivan's final show and tell, so you'll need to set up some school desks and things a' that sort.

MAMA LOU: (Cont'd.) Ivan never outgrew his dream to speak to birds. It wouldn't a' been such a problem if he'd kept it to himself. But he had to share it with the world and that's what got 'im into trouble.
