“The Copyright Violation”

(1 male, 1 female, 1 flexible)

(Two people stand outside a door. One is a well-dressed, no-nonsense LAWYER with a briefcase and a handful of legal papers. The other is a grungy REPO MAN with a threatening look. The lawyer knocks on the door. A YOUNG WOMAN opens it, cautiously.)

ALICIA: (Warily.) May I help you?

LAWYER: You're Alicia Johnson?

ALICIA: (Still wary.) Yes.

LAWYER: Alicia Lynn Johnson of 2458 Locustcrest Road?

ALICIA: What's going on? Who are you?

LAWYER: (Handing HER a business card.) Here's my card. I'm an attorney representing Megamedia Studios, Inc. and —

ALICIA: Oh! Look, I swear I returned that video on time and I paid all the late fees and everything and —

LAWYER: That's not why I'm here.

ALICIA: Then what —

LAWYER: (Looking at his paperwork.) Our records show that you recently made a trip to the beach and —

ALICIA: Yes, the Outer Banks. Why?

LAWYER: Where you visited a certain tattoo parlor, hereafter referred to as “The Parlor,” where you received a certain tattoo, approximately three centimeters to the left of the —

ALICIA: (Using her hands to cover her posterior.) Hey!

LAWYER: Here's the long and short of it: Your tattoo is against the law.

ALICIA: What? What do you mean? I'm over 18. I have a perfectly good right to get a tattoo if I want to.

LAWYER: (Sighs.) Paragraph one, section three. “Said tattoo depicts a cartoon character, the rights of which thereto are the exclusive property of Megamedia Studios, Inc.; any reproduction in any form whatsoever is hereby forbidden —”

ALICIA: It's a tattoo!

LAWYER: It's a copyright violation.

ALICIA: What? But nobody can see it. Well, except for my boyfriend and that one guy I met at that party but hey, that's none of your business anyway!

LAWYER: Actually, it is. (Continuing to read.) “Any unauthorized use or display of the image of said cartoon character without the express written consent of Megamedia Studios, Inc. is a violation of all applicable federal copyright and trademark laws, and furthermore may constitute a violation of relevant international treaties and trade agreements governing intellectual property —”

ALICIA: It's a cartoon character! It's not intellectual property!

LAWYER: Sorry, ma'am, the law says otherwise. It may be a tattoo for you, but it's a valuable commercial, um, asset for my client. And your use of it is very much unauthorized.

ALICIA: But — but —

LAWYER: No buts about it.

ALICIA: (Becoming belligerent.) So what are you going to do about it?

LAWYER: You have two choices.

ALICIA: And they are?

LAWYER: Option one. You can sign this agreement. (Hands over a thick legal document.) As you'll see, it requires the licensee — that would be you — to pay a certain annual sum for the use of said character —

ALICIA: (Reading the contract.) Good grief!

LAWYER: It also spells out the schedule for residuals —

ALICIA: Ohmigod!

LAWYER: Royalties.

ALICIA: I don't believe this.

LAWYER: — and other miscellaneous fees.

ALICIA: I don't have that kind of money!

LAWYER: You'll also see that the contract governs the use and display of said character once a license has been granted.

ALICIA: (Reading.) What the —!?

LAWYER: Over in sub-section six, it spells out all the things you can and cannot do —

ALICIA: (Reading.) I can't do what?!

LAWYER: I'd suggest you pay particular attention to paragraphs 3 through 30.

ALICIA: (Reading.) No way!

LAWYER: May I remind you that any improper use or display of said character would reflect adversely on the copyright holder —

ALICIA: (Reading.) Well, I'd never do that anyway. At least not in public.

LAWYER: — and could potentially diminish the commercial value of the aforementioned character to Megamedia, its heirs and assigns—

ALICIA: (Handing the contract back to the LAWYER.) I'm not signing this.

LAWYER: You're certain?

ALICIA: I mean, it's a stupid cartoon character on my — well, never mind where it is. I'm not paying you anything. I paid enough to have it done anyway.

LAWYER: Very well then. Don't say I didn't warn you.

ALICIA: So what's the other option? You said I had two options.

LAWYER: Your other choice? That would be Shylock here.

REPO MAN: Now? Can I do it now?

ALICIA: Who's he?

(REPO MAN grins an evil and threatening grin.)

LAWYER: Repo man.

(ALICIA screams as LIGHTS OUT go out abruptly.)
