STORY OF THE PLAY

Here's a sparkling mellerdrammer that has more plot twists than a pretzel factory. Only, in this case, the setting is a near-bankrupt photo studio in the Territory of Arizona. The owner is Mrs. Paula Roid, a widow who divides her time between her sickbed and her lovely daughter, Aster, "The dainty darling of the darkroom."

But several other Arizonans have their beady eyes on Miss Roid, including the dastardly Mayor Gobblecrud who owns the building that houses the photo studio. And natcherly, Mrs. Roid is behind in her rent. Just when the situation is about to explode, a stagecoach arrives with several interesting characters including Jacques-Louis Daguerre, a photographic genius from Paris (and a handsome one at that!).

With one easy set and a grand mix of characters, this play has delighted audiences in community theatres and professional melodrama dinner theatres. Performance time about 50 minutes.

CAST OF CHARACTERS

(3 M, 7 W)

JACQUE-LOUIS DAGUERRE: A photographic and inventive genius from Paris

PLACE: The Roid Photo Studio in Hotfoot, Arizona Territory

TIME: 1890.

SYNOPSIS OF THE PLAY

Scene 1: Mid-morning.

Scene 2: Five minutes later.

SETTING

There are doors DSR to street; URC to darkroom; and DSL to Roid living quarters. The sign on the URC door reads, "Darkroom." Furnishings include couch and chairs, studio backdrop in USL corner, camera on tripod slightly left of CS. Other furnishings to suit the director.

PROPS

AGENT: White hat, white vest, black hat, black vest, gun, check.

ASTER: Rubber apron, rubber gloves.

LUNGE: Black cape, black plug hat, white spats, stretcher, small bottle, handkerchief, two black hoods, rubber mallet, gun, rope.

JACQUE: White beret and cravat, white suit, trunk, coin, handkerchief, camera, handful of 8 x 10" pictures, piece of paper with writing.

PAULA ROID: Tray with pitcher of water and glasses.

MATTIE: Five gags.

MRS. BRADY: Small handgun, purse, hat.

MRS. EASTMAN: Small handgun, purse, hat.

SCENE 1

(AT RISE: MRS. PAULA ROID, a neatly dressed middle-aged lady, is dusting and polishing the camera. There is a KNOCKING on the SR door.)

MRS. ROID: Come in! (AGENT, middle-aged, polite, enters. He wears Levi's, white cowboy hat, white vest.)
Well! It's about time you showed up.

AGENT: Time for what?

MRS. ROID: To pay us for last year's photograph of your stage coach building.

AGENT: Begging your pardon, ma'am, er, Mrs. Roid, I wasn't here last year. You must be thinking of my evil twin brother.

MRS. ROID: Piffle! Trying to beat me out of payment by laying it on an imaginary twin brother.

AGENT: Honest, dear lady, I have an identical twin. Please believe me.

MRS. ROID: Maybe you have and maybe you don't. (Looks at HIM intently) H'mmmm. At least you have an honest face.

AGENT: Very much obliged.

MRS. ROID: Then, why are you here?

AGENT: I'm on a mission of great import.

MRS. ROID: Oh, pooh! Don't take up my time, sir, with your fake emoting. Just get out and leave me to my poor health.

AGENT: Anything I can do for you?

MRS. ROID: Just get out.

AGENT: But...but...

MRS. ROID: And take your "buts" with you.

AGENT: (Leaves through SR door) Yes, ma'am...

(MRS. ROID grasps her face in pain. Then totters around in a circle, finally collapsing on the couch.)

The Perils of a Frontier Photographer

-6-

MRS. ROID: Oh, I'm not long for this world. (SHE attempts to raise her head, but falls back on the couch.) Woe is me. Woe is me. I'm dying. (SHE sits up and shouts in a bullhorn voice.) Daughter! Daughter!

ASTER: (Entering from darkroom. SHE is a dainty beauty, wearing a rubber apron over her dress and rubber gloves on her hands.) Did you call, Mother?

MRS. ROID: No, I didn't call "Mother," I called "Daughter."

ASTER: How do you feel, dear?

MRS. ROID: How do I look? (With sudden vigor, SHE leaps off couch and stands in front of ASTER.)

ASTER: Never better. (To audience) She really does look a little pale, but I must keep her spirits up.

MRS. ROID: All must go well this morning. I'm expecting two cash customers.

ASTER: How wonderful!

MRS. ROID: The Giggie Sisters will be here soon for a sitting.

ASTER: I hope they pay in advance. Gold. None of that Arizona Territory paper money.

MRS. ROID: Now, Aster, you leave the finances to me.

ASTER: How right you are. I have my little hands full developing the negatives and making prints.

MRS. ROID: Making Prince? What's his last name?

ASTER: Alas, there is no Prince in my life. Although I wish there were a man to help with our financial burden.

MRS. ROID: True, we are penniless, but we must consider ourselves lucky that your late father, my late husband, taught us how to run the studio.

ASTER: Indeed.

MRS. ROID: (To audience) We couldn't afford to send him to the Gobblecrud Hospital.

ASTER: Well, back to the developing tanks. (Starts to leave)

MRS. ROID: To the what?

ASTER: Tanks.

MRS. ROID: You're welcome.
