STORY OF THE PLAY

Darby is a senior in high school, editor of the school's newspaper and dating the homecoming queen. Everything in his life is normal with one secret exception. Darby has HIV, which he contracted from a blood transfusion as a child. The play shows what happens when a group of typical high school students learn of Darby's disease and how they deal with the loss of a close friend to AIDS. The play opens with humor as Darby deals with his diverse newspaper staff, moves forward with romance as he ends one relationship and starts another with Wanda, and ends with a dramatic scene.

The play is performed on a single box set of a school newspaper production room. Four computers line the walls, one DSR, one DSL, and two along the UPS wall. There is an entrance to outside hallways SL and SR. Along the back wall are two doors. One USR is marked "Teacher's Office" and the other, USL is marked "Darkroom" and has a warning light or sign near it. Next to darkroom is a bookshelf with stereo and speakers on one shelf, a mirror on another shelf and books on the other shelves. SR of bookshelf is worktable. Various signs and posters related and unrelated to newspaper production hang on the walls. Among them are large signs stating "No Food or Drink at Computers." DSL is a small desk for the paper's editor. An "Editor" nameplate sits on desk facing audience, along with other desk related items. Also DS, just right of CS, is a large table with four chairs around it.

PLACE: High school newspaper production room

TIME: The 1995-96 school year

PRODUCTION NOTES

Slide Presentation: Stage some seasonal events if possible (Halloween, Christmas) to show the passage of time. Casting the play a few months in advance will allow cast members to be photographed together at a number of events in different seasons. The play may be staged without the slide show, but the production will then lack the development of the relationship between Wanda and Darby. It is a lot of work, but the slide show was very effective and well received by the audience in the original production.

Animals: While they are unpredictable, the use of dogs adds a great deal to the play and helps establish Wanda's character. In the original production, a Yorkshire terrier was used for Poopers and a golden lab puppy for D. D. For the dog urine, squirt gun ring was used with yellow water.

Costumes: Actors portraying students wear clothes typical of teenagers attending school. Sweaters/jackets/sweatpants and other clothes can be used in layers and quickly pulled off for quick changes between scenes in order to establish a passing of time.

SET PROPS: Three tables with computers or typewriters, one table, one teacher desk, bookshelf, worktable, eight chairs, posters for wall, "Teacher" and "Darkroom" signs, Harold statue, mirror, stereo, books for shelf, "editor" sign for desk, waste baskets, picture in frame, miscellaneous objects in desk drawers.
